RECONCILIATION
ACTION PLAN
REFLECT

Statement from Professor Fabienne Mackay, QIMR Berghofer Director and CEO

QIMR Berghofer's 2025–2026 Reflect Reconciliation Action Plan (RAP) is the Institute's first formal step toward acknowledging the deep and enduring connection that Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples have to the lands on which we work.

In our archives, notes indicate that early medical research conducted in Queensland recognised the invaluable knowledge held by Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples about health, the environment, and the treatment of disease. QIMR Berghofer forebears learned from Indigenous communities about the medicinal properties of native plants, and, after the Institute was established in 1945, researchers sought to understand and address the unique health challenges of northern Australia by drawing on the lived experience and expertise of First Nations people.

However, there is still much to achieve in collaborating with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities to advance health outcomes through research that is ethical, inclusive, and impactful. By strengthening partnerships, increasing representation, and deepening our understanding of Indigenous knowledge systems, we strive to contribute to a more equitable future.

As Queensland's largest medical research institute, QIMR Berghofer is uniquely positioned to support transformative change in the medical research space. By listening, learning, and integrating Indigenous knowledge into our work, we can conduct research that is innovative, culturally responsive, reflects the health priorities of First Nations communities and improves outcomes in areas such as chronic disease, mental health, and preventative care.

Yet our commitment also extends beyond research. We are dedicated to creating a workplace that is welcoming, inclusive, and respectful of diverse perspectives. We strive for an environment where Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander staff, students, and collaborators feel valued and supported, and which ensures First Nations perspectives help shape our policies and decision-making. By fostering cultural competency among our workforce, we can ensure reconciliation is not just a concept, but a lived experience.

As Director and CEO, I am proud to lead an organisation that embraces this responsibility and commits to meaningful change. I would like to thank the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people who have given their time and expertise to developing this RAP and the Institute staff who have brought it to fruition. I encourage all staff and students, our Council, partners, and stakeholders to engage with our RAP and work together towards a future built on respect, opportunity, and shared success.

Statement from Karen Mundine, Reconciliation Australia Chief Executive Officer

Reconciliation Australia welcomes QIMR Berghofer to the Reconciliation Action Plan (RAP) program with the formal endorsement of its inaugural Reflect RAP.

QIMR Berghofer joins a network of more than 3,000 corporate, government, and not-for-profit organisations that have made a formal commitment to reconciliation through the RAP program.

Since 2006, RAPs have provided a framework for organisations to leverage their structures and diverse spheres of influence to support the national reconciliation movement. The program's potential for impact is greater than ever, with close to 3 million people now working or studying in an organisation with a RAP.

The four RAP types — Reflect, Innovate, Stretch and Elevate — allow RAP partners to continuously develop and strengthen reconciliation commitments in new ways. This Reflect RAP will lay the foundations, priming the workplace for future RAPs and reconciliation initiatives.

The RAP program's strength is its framework of relationships, respect, and opportunities, allowing an organisation to strategically set its reconciliation commitments in line with its own business objectives, for the most effective outcomes.

These outcomes contribute towards the five dimensions of reconciliation: race relations; equality and equity; institutional integrity; unity; and historical acceptance.

It is critical to not only uphold all five dimensions of reconciliation, but also increase awareness of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander cultures, histories, knowledge, and leadership across all sectors of Australian society.

This Reflect RAP enables QIMR Berghofer to deepen its understanding of its sphere of influence and the unique contribution it can make to lead progress across the five dimensions. Getting these first steps right will ensure the sustainability of future RAPs and reconciliation initiatives, and provide meaningful impact toward Australia's reconciliation journey.

Congratulations QIMR Berghofer, welcome to the RAP program, and I look forward to following your reconciliation journey in the years to come.

About QIMR Berghofer

QIMR Berghofer is a leading medical research institute dedicated to improving health and wellbeing through impactful research. Our core focus areas include cancer, infectious diseases, chronic inflammation, genetics of disease, population health, and brain and mental health. We aim to address major health challenges, including those affecting Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities, through cutting-edge research and innovation.

QIMR Berghofer has a dedicated team of over 1,000 scientists, support staff, and students within the Institute. Currently 6 employees in our workforce identify as being Aboriginal and/or Torres Strait Islander peoples (representing less than 1% of our total workforce).

While based in Queensland, our research collaborations extend across Australia and internationally, influencing health outcomes worldwide. While the primary research facility is in Brisbane, our work extends across various regional and remote communities through research partnerships and outreach programs.

At QIMR Berghofer, we are actively translating scientific discoveries into real-world health solutions. Our work moves from the research bench to the bedside, influencing public health policy, medical practice, and new treatments. By fostering collaboration with universities, hospitals, government agencies, and industry partners, we accelerate the translation of research into meaningful health outcomes for individuals, families, and communities.

A Journey of Healing, Growth and Discovery

By artist Leah Cummins, Bunya Designs

This artwork for QIMR Berghofer's Reconciliation Action Plan represents a powerful journey of healing, growth, and discovery.

Yathi winja (Good day)

My name is Leah Cummins, I am a proud Mayi woman from North-Western Queensland. Mayi-Kulan from my father and Kalkadoon from my mother. I have family connections from the Simpson Desert up to the Gulf of Carpentaria.

I find inspiration in my cultural identity and bring my stories of my country and people to life in my art. I paint stories of strength for women and children, love of the land and all my people. I pay respect to the ancestors who give me these stories in my creativity, to share my culture that transcends words and draws people into wanting to learn about First Nations people.

I paint both traditional and contemporary art using storytelling in every art piece to educate and teach everyone of my people's culture. I hope to inspire and uplift my people by contributing to the sharing of culture and stories through my art.

I want to share all my pieces with love and harmony "Bunya Sister".

I find inspiration in my cultural identity and bring my stories of my country and people to life in my art.

At the heart of the piece is a central figure — symbolising the individual — supported by staff, services, and the wider community. Surrounding this figure are eight pillars, each representing one of the eight decades QIMR Berghofer has dedicated to advancing research.

These pillars reflect the core values and areas of focus that form the foundation of QIMR Berghofer:

- Respect
- Brain health
- Mental health
- Accountability
- Population health
- Infection and inflammation
- Cancer research
- Collaboration
- Excellence
- Integrity

Encircling these elements are microbes — the subjects of intense research by QIMR Berghofer scientists. Flowing through the artwork are river pathways, symbolising the discovery process and the growth it nurtures — mirrored in the thriving plant life depicted throughout the design.

The helping hands of QIMR Berghofer are shown through symbols of connection: palm leaves, shells, the reef, flowing rivers, and the vast blue ocean — linking bush to sea, and spreading across our communities like seeds carried on the wind.

These elements illustrate QIMR Berghofer's outreach — its staff connecting with communities, seeking solutions and cures for the health challenges faced by many Queenslanders.

May this journey of healing, growth and discovery continue to flourish, honouring the spirit of reconciliation through every step of research and care.

Our Reconciliation Action Plan

This Reflect RAP represents a public commitment and the opportunity for QIMR Berghofer to advance reconciliation in Australia. The RAP is a critical step to advancing and formalising our current activities, and a basis from which to build on relationships and mutually beneficial partnerships with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples and organisations. The RAP aims to provide a structured framework for strengthening cultural awareness, engagement, and collaboration in all areas of our work, from research to recruitment and program delivery. Through the RAP, we aim to ensure that reconciliation is embedded into our core practices and values.

QIMR Berghofer has a long history of working towards improving health outcomes for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples. Over the years, we have integrated cultural awareness into our research and operations through the leadership of Greg Pratt, our former Manager of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Research, who worked at QIMR Berghofer for over a decade. Greg, an Aboriginal descendant of the Noonucal tribe of the Quandamooka people, championed research focused on health equity and improving services for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples communities. His efforts have laid the foundation for QIMR Berghofer's ongoing reconciliation journey, and QIMR Berghofer has demonstrated its dedication to creating meaningful, culturally safe spaces and partnerships. Our Reflect RAP now builds on this history, aiming to reinforce and expand our efforts in reconciliation, creating a more structured and comprehensive approach to advancing health equity for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples.

The implementation of our RAP will be guided by a dedicated Reconciliation Action Plan Working Group, composed of 15 staff members from across the scientific and professional areas of the organisation. This group will be responsible for overseeing the development and execution of the RAP, ensuring that it aligns with our organisational goals and values. We will adopt a holistic approach, integrating reconciliation principles into our recruitment, consultation, research, education, and program design processes. The RAP will not only focus on creating awareness but also on actively building and maintaining meaningful, mutually beneficial relationships with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities and organisations.

The QIMR Berghofer Chief Operating Officer will be our RAP Champion, with Professor Darren Gray chairing the RAP Working Group and the Manager, Community Engagement and Events as the RAP Working Group Secretariat. The QIMR Berghofer RAP Working Group comprises:

Professor Darren Gray	Program Director, Population Health
Bridget French	Manager, Community Engagement and Events
Alicia Nally	Acting Manager, Media, Communications and Government
Dr Nancy Cloake	Consumer and Community Involvement Lead
Dr Manuel Serrano-Santos	Education Coordinator
Professor Sarah Medland	Distinguished Scientist, Psychiatric Genetics
Paul Collins	Analytical Facility Manager
Dr Suzy Ossipow	Senior Research Fellow and Research Centre Manager
Rachael Adams	Senior Manager, Strategy and Development
Associate Professor Katja Fischer	Senior Group Leader, Scabies
Dr Deepani Fernando	Senior Research Officer, Scabies
Dr Catherine Gordon	Team Head, Applied Tropical and Molecular Parasitology Lab
Dr Katie Lineburg	Senior Research Officer, Immunopathology Group
Tash Jobson	Senior Media and Communications Advisor
Professor Patricia Valery	Group Leader, Cancer and Chronic Disease

Our partnerships and current activities

QIMR Berghofer is committed to addressing the significant health disparities between Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples and non-Indigenous Australians. Since establishing its first Aboriginal Health Research Unit in 1971, the Institute has focused on sustainable, consultative, and translational research aimed at improving Indigenous health outcomes. Key areas of research have included asthma and bronchiectasis in Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children, cancer care pathways, genomic health research, and culturally adapted clinical communication training, such as the Clinical Yarning initiative. The Institute has also worked closely with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities to raise awareness of pressing health concerns, in the areas of cancer, scabies, strongyloidiasis, pain management and chronic liver disease.

QIMR Berghofer has forged significant research partnerships to improve Indigenous health, including a collaboration with the MJD Foundation to enhance patient care for Machado-Joseph Disease, and a pilot elimination program for strongyloidiasis, a parasitic infection which disproportionately affects Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples. This multidisciplinary project led by Professor Darren Gray attracted an $5 million National Health and Medical Research Council (NHMRC) Synergy Grant. A $1.4 million Medical Research Future Fund (MRFF) grant was awarded to Professor Sarah Medland to improve our understanding of pharmacogenomic variation with a focus on Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples; and Professor Medland will participate in the ground breaking $5 million MRFF-funded Australian Alliance for Indigenous Genomics Network (ALIGN).

Past projects include research on neonatal health, and mosquito control in Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities, as well as Professor Patricia Valery's groundbreaking research on respiratory health, and cancer care for First Nations peoples. This includes asthma studies in Torres Strait Islander children, such as a large prevalence study and a randomised controlled trial (RCT) on an education intervention, as well as research on bronchiectasis in First Nations children in the Northern Territory. Additional initiatives include Clinical Yarning in pain management and integrated genetic healthcare research for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples.

Ongoing projects include a chronic liver disease and liver cancer program, featuring an RCT to deliver training, education, liver health checks, and On Country liver cancer surveillance for remote First Nations communities.

Recognising scabies as a neglected yet serious health issue linked to overcrowding and poverty, scabies research has been a major focus for the Institute, particularly its impact on Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities in remote northern Australia. Associate Professor Katja Fischer and her team have secured three successive NHMRC grants (2013 – 2019) and over $3 million in international funds (2021 – 2028) for biomedical scabies research and are leading the development of the first Scabies Rapid Antigen Test (RAT) to improve early detection and management. The group has also secured funding to explore how scabies affects the healthy skin microbiome and to understand the link between scabies and secondary bacterial infections as well as developing next-generation drugs to treat the condition.

Since 2006, the Scabies Group has actively engaged Indigenous students and teachers through work experience programs, as well as the Science and Young Minds initiative in North Queensland. The program, which collaborates with QUT's Oodgeroo Unit, has positively impacted remote schools with at least 60% Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students, encouraging university pathways for participants. Associate Professor Fischer has raised over $135,000 for this initiative.. Dr Nathan Stevenson and Dr Kartik Iyer have leveraged artificial intelligence to identify developmental delays in preterm babies – an issue disproportionately affecting First Nations peoples – while Dr Emily Hielscher's work has shed light on the higher prevalence of youth self-harm in regional and remote areas.

The Institute remains dedicated to fostering health equity and Indigenous representation in medical research. QIMR Berghofer's Regional Outreach Programs visits regional and remote Queensland high schools every year to encourage Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students to pursue careers in medical research. The Mosquito Control Laboratory, in collaboration with CSIRO, hosted a workshop for students from Tagai State College, Thursday Island, introducing them to mosquito-borne disease research and control strategies. Ongoing networking efforts with the Northern Aboriginal and Torres Strait Island Health Alliance further strengthen engagement with First Nations communities.

The Institute has celebrated National Reconciliation Week and NAIDOC Week for over a decade and, in 2013, unveiled Water Memory in the Central Building foyer, a significant artwork by internationally renowned Waanyi artist Judy Watson, commemorating the Aboriginal history of the Herston site.

These initiatives reflect the Institute's enduring commitment to reconciliation, community engagement, and improving health outcomes for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples.
